COMMUNITY SOLAR

Are you interested?

The Clean Power Plan has invoked electrical utilities to explore renewable opportunities that reduce CO₂ emissions.

In the November issue of the WEC News, I discussed briefly the viability of solar in North Central Wisconsin. The conclusion is that out of the renewable possibilities of solar, geothermal, wind, and water, solar biomass is one of the most feasible sources in our part of the country. This feasibility is based on initial investment return, generation output and sustainability.

Solar renewable alternatives at the cooperative level are: utility-scale, net metering, and community solar. Utility-scale is a large array tied directly into the distribution grid system, whereas net metering is a solar array on the member's side of the meter that generates through a cooperative meter. The meter registers the flow of energy in both directions in order to bill for consumption and reimburse for generated energy pushed back into the grid. If you are considering net metering, please contact your cooperative to discuss interconnection.

The one I would like to discuss, and for you to consider, is community solar, also known as a solar garden.

Community solar has taken off at the cooperative level. Seven of the 24 Wisconsin cooperatives have built community solar projects in the last couple of years or are in the process of building one. Community solar is a way that you, the member, can share in the benefits of solar generation and purchase or subscribe to solar panels and receive a bill credit for its generation. If you don't want the expense of installing an array on your property or solar panels mounted to your roof, this could be a consideration. Perhaps you don't want to remove trees to maximize the potential of the sun, or maybe you don't want the burden of maintaining the array. These concerns can easily be eliminated if the solar array is operated and maintained by your cooperative at a selected site, typically next to the cooperative office. More importantly, you might wish to support the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions through renewable generation or assist in reducing your system peak demand through your own generation, which in turn reduces expense. This is an alternative to do just that.

At our most recent Price Electric Cooperative committeepersons meeting, interest was expressed in the possibility of a solar community project, so the question is whether or not the members are interested in pursuing this possibility. Presently, we are only soliciting interest in the prospect of community solar to evaluate whether to proceed with discussions with a solar representative to establish type, purchase and installation expense, cost recovery timeline, array and panel capacity and costs. You will not be under any obligation by expressing interest and/or non-interest.

As we continue to evaluate opportunities to reduce greenhouse gas emissions in association with your expenditures, we would like to offer the opportunity for more members to own solar and to provide green energy to our members. Please respond at: <https://www.surveymonkey.com/r/5DFLPST> or detach and fill out the form below and mail to your cooperative. Those who do respond will be entered into a drawing for a $25 bill credit. I look forward to reading your responses.

KOLB TO HEAD WEST

Joanne Kolb, manager of finance and administration, has accepted a position at Powder River Energy in Wyoming, and will be leaving the Price Electric family early in February. Joanne started working at PEC in 2009 and has seen a great many changes in the co-op over the years. Along with the many hats she has worn here, from manager to HR administrator to IT guru, she has been an invaluable asset to the cooperative and will be deeply missed upon her departure. We wish her nothing but the best and a future filled with success and opportunity as she begins a new chapter in her cooperative experience.

PEC STAFFING UPDATE

PEC would like to congratulate Theresa Raleigh, who began her new role of consumer services supervisor on January 2. Theresa most recently worked as the operations clerk. Theresa's background in the financial industry and customer service will be a great asset in the PEC front office. Congratulations, Theresa!
